Cautious investors look for better standards

The world has changed and with it the qualities that wealthy investors should seek in their financial advice, writes Loren Fox > recovered the ground lost during the financial crisis but the investment management industry is still dealing with the repercussions.

Individual investors remain wary and costs of investments are under intense scrutiny. Financial advisers must, therefore, offer increased flexibility in navigating markets. Volatility and risk management are more popular themes than growth and out-performance, and investing requires a global perspective.

Industry practices that developed in the shadow of the recession following the crisis are permanent features of the investing landscape. The investing world has changed and with it the qualities that wealthy investors should seek in a financial adviser.

Financial advisers now compete with online brokerages that can execute trades and track portfolios at very low cost and send that data to an investor's smartphone. To go beyond impersonal websites, a financial adviser needs to supply guidance, take the initiative, customise an approach and mum standard for advisers of $250m provide a holistic view of an investor's in assets under management (AUM) and finances.

Today's investor needs a financial adviser with an ability to survey the world dealer firms and scored them on attributes and the goal was to present a picture of market of stocks. bonds. mutual funds, var- such as AUM, AUM growth rates, compliiable annuities, hedge funds and other ance records and experience. The process assets.

In the aftermath of a financial crisis in which different investments all plunged together, picking one that outpaces most of its peers – such as finding the mid-cap separate article published with the list of stock fund that outperforms 90 per cent the 400 on page 4.

he US stock market may have of similar funds – is no longer sufficient. An adviser needs to work with his or her client on a plan and then craft a diversified portfolio that is most likely to achieve the investor's goals. The focus is on the outcome, whether that is a comfortable retirement or an estate for heirs. Preferably, the path towards that outcome should not be points. so turbulent that it gives the investor panic attacks.

Elite advisers are more than investment counsellors. Many advisers make their biggest contributions in assisting clients with non-investment matters such as personalised tax strategies, estate planning, business succession and charitable giving.

In other words, a large amount of effort and ability is required, which is why the Financial Times is offering a fresh way to look at what makes a top adviser. The inaugural edition of the Financial Times 400 Top Advisers provides a snapshot of the very best people at traditional broker-dealer firms in the US.

The team at the FT's sister publication, Ignites Distribution Research, set a mini-10 years of experience. The team scoured lists of qualified advisers from brokerassured objectivity, as there was no room to play favourites or go back and tweak the results

The methodology is explained fully in a

Several important issues should be noted. The researchers used verified AUM from the brokerages' home offices, so that like with-like comparisons could be made. Industry certifications such as the CFA or CFP, growing in importance throughout financial services, were awarded bonus

Advisers whose information is easily accessible online were awarded small bonuses, because such transparency should be the norm

The list is presented as a grouping of 400. There is no attempt to rank the advisers from 1 to 400, because there is not a method available that is precise enough to separate the 200th-best adviser from the 201st, for example

The FT 400 is listed state by state and the states with higher populations, and greater concentrations of wealth, understandably have more advisers on the list. It is not surprising that New York City is represented by 52 advisers, by far the most from one municipality. Advisers from 37 states, plus Washington DC, are represented. This represents a good geographic diversity, given that there was no mandate to include every state.

FT readers are educated and discerning

The 'average' adviser has been in the business for 26 years and manages $1.3bn leading financial advisers who would pass muster with the hard-to-please investor. Although the list is not comprehensive, for anyone looking for an top adviser the FT 400 is a good place to start.

So, after running the numbers, what does the list look like?

It is a big and experienced group. The "average" adviser has been in the business for 26 years and manages a sizeable $1.3bn

Reflecting the trend towards specialisation in wealth management, more than 80 per cent of the FT 400 work in teams. The average team size is 11, including sales assistants, analysts and client relationship managers, among others. More than a quarter of the advisers work on teams where specific members are responsible for certain asset classes and/or product providers.

Since top advisers are focused on providing value to their clients, it is natural that more than two-thirds of the money they manage is in advisory accounts, charging asset-based fees for advice, rather than in commission-based accounts.

The fee-based side of the business is growing at the expense of the old-fashioned model that paid advisers by transaction. The image of the stock jockey from films such as Wall Street is quickly becoming a relic. These advisers do not sell hot stories but calm and collected financial plans

Within the fee-based business model, the fastest-growing aspect is the programme giving an adviser complete discretion over a client's account (within guidelines). Without the need to run every trade by the investor the adviser can act more tactically in response to market developments and can add non-traditional investments to a client's portfolio without fuss.

More money is expected to flow into these discretionary accounts

The advisers are optimistic. Ignites Distribution Research asked members of the the FT 400 list about their expectations for the US economy and more than four out of five anticipated moderate growth; no one forecast a recession. It makes sense, then that the single biggest allocation is to US equity, comprising well over 40 per cent of assets managed by the FT 400.

While there are areas of agreement among FT 400 members, these professionals can disagree about the details of how to be a valuable adviser

In the article on whether advisers work better in teams (see page 14), one says "running a practice by committee does not usually work that well". Another FT 400 member says "everybody has a different skill set".

Advisers display varying levels of caution on retail alternative investments, go-anywhere funds that invest tactically and whether US equities are back in favour.

What they can agree on is that each client has different needs, goals and appetites for risk. An investment approach that works for one portfolio might be exactly what another client is trying to avoid. So it is important for an investor to vet a potential financial adviser carefully.

Beyond experience and certificates, the adviser needs ultimately to mesh well with clients and be able to communicate in a genuine give-and-take style that serves the investor's long-term needs.

Websites increase competition but lack that personal touch

Online brokers

Fesse Mark finds do-it-yourself sites are moving into wealth management

Discount online brokers, led by Charles Schwab, TD Ameritrade and Fidelity have revolutionised stock trading with low prices, easy account access and low minimum investmen requirements.

These brokers have become the main choice of the self-directed investor enabling trades and providing account information and a variety of free online tools for analysing an investor's portfolio. Traditionally, they have only nibbled at the edges of the US wealth management industry, leaving advice and planning to financial advisers but that is changing.

In recent years, the leading online brokers have enhanced their offerings, edging further towards the advice industry

Fidelity.com's online Income Strategy Evaluator can estimate the monthly retirement income that an investor can generate from a nest egg, suggest hypothetical combinations of income sources and assess a portfolio's resilience in the face of market volatility. The question is whether online firms could displace financial advisers in the way online brokers disrupted the trading industry. The answer lies in understanding the capabilities and limits of the new breed of online investment providers such as Betterment, Personal Capital, MarketRiders and LearnVest.

In the years since the financial crisis, these sleek start-ups for do-it-yourself investors have appealed to young, tech-savvy and affluent professionals. This generation grew up and PayPal, the online paywith instant messaging, ments company, launched video-chat and online banking. They demand instant access to information and discount the importance of a physical relationship

Online brokers are edging towards the advice industry

Betterment, almost five years old, appeals to costconscious beginners. The website is inviting and easy to use. When users register, they are guided towards a simple risk-assessment questionnaire and, within minutes, are set up with a model portfolio of stocks, bonds and other investments based on their risk appetite and investment goals. For these services, Betterment charges a management fee of 0.15-0.35 per cent, depending on the investor's balance. That is less than the 1.0-1.5 per cent financial advisers typically charge

While Betterment appeals to beginners, not all new online advisory sites are aimed at the smaller investor. MarketRiders and Personal Capital primarily market themselves to individuals with at least $50,000 to $100,000 in investable assets. MarketRiders guides investors to create a model portfolio assembled from index-tracking funds, and then monitors it. Meanwhile, Bill Harris, former chief executive of business software developer Intuit,

Personal Capital in 2011 to give wealthy people a holistic view of their portfolios

Personal Capital's plat form allows users to connect all their accounts, including bank deposits, brokerages and 401(k) pension plans, with credit cards, mortgages and car loans. The site gives users a 360-degree view of their entire wealth portfolios in one place, allowing them to track portfolio performance. pinpoint market movers and see how their portfolios stack up against indices.

What separates Personal Capital from other new online devices is its combination of tech tools with personal advice. The company offers users dedicated financial advisers and is backed by an experienced investment committee that draws on the expertise of individuals from some of the industry's best-known wealth managers. Financial advisers can deliver customised strategies, but the service comes at a cost: fees based on assets range from 0.75 to 0.95 per cent, depending on account size.

It can be less expensive at four-vear-old LearnVest which offers online tools for novices to learn budgeting and the basics of investing. Advanced users have access to certified financial planners for guidance

Personal Capital provide solutions for a market traditionally underserved by financial advisers. They help individuals understand their finances better, intro duce them to the impor tance of investing at a young age and provide much-needed education on the risk/return characteris tics of various asset classes Online self-directed tool look unlikely to supplar

Tools such as those offered by Betterment and the traditional financial advisory business just yet Financial advisers are much more than mere investment advisers creat ing a proper asset alloca tion: they are wealth plan ners, offering tax advice, complex estate planning retirement cash flow plan ning, liquidity advice and business advisory services.

Top advisers assess inves tors' accounts proactively and offer tax and retiremen advice. In difficult times they offer "hand-holding and in better times they can even get shares of hot ini tial public offerings for some clients. Elite advisers can take over full discretion of the investor's account making decisions in the bes interest of clients without consulting them before hand.

The real threat from do-ityourself websites is to financial "planners" that masquerade as full-service wealth advisers but only provide passive asset alloca tion services. Elite advisers can learn from these web sites: investors respond well to full account access, espe cially on mobile devices and to using technology that makes doing busines easier.

Some are learning. Ri Edelman, wealth manager last year launched a client only web portal. But i seems that the value of experienced advisers, such as those in the FT 400, is not something that can be easily replicated by online

Fast-spreading strategy strikes a global happy medium

any financial advisers would argue that US investors are actually global. Just witness the US stock market hiccups sparked by the banking crisis in Cyprus. It is no wonder that one of the fastest-spreading investing strategies is global tactical asset allocation – investing in a range of securities around the world and altering the mix as markets change.

These go-anywhere strategies have long served as an institutional investor niche. In recent years, it is financial advisers who have been ploughing assets into global tactical asset allocation (GTAA) mutual funds and separately managed accounts. While clients scarred by the 2008 crash drove much of the growth, GTAA products may have staving power in portfolios, says Todd Sanford, an adviser based in Portage, Michigan, who oversees $450m and is affiliated with Raymond James Financial Services. "It's a longer-term trend," he says. "Products like this are a happy medium between full exposure to the markets and low-yielding fixed income.

GTAA products come in various shapes but the core traits include having a broader range of holdings than the typical "style box" categories and the use of tactical portfolio moves to adjust for changes in markets, economic conditions or geopolitical trends. The category ranges from plain stock-and-bond funds to strategies that can hop across country exposures or asset classes, including commodities and deriva-

Separately managed accounts built with exchange traded funds (ETFs) are among the fastest-growing products in the category, jumping 65 per cent last year to reach $4.3bn in assets, according to Morningstar.

Mutual funds have the lion's share of new assets. The BlackRock Global Allocation Fund, which typically invests in more than 700 securities in 40 countries and 30 currencies, has $53bn in assets. Pimco and Ivv Funds both have funds in the category of more than $25bn. Old Westbury Funds. Invesco, GMO and Virtus Investment Partners have large GTAA mutual funds.

Assets in go-anywhere mutual funds $113.2bn in March 2012, according to Morningstar. The number of funds jumped from 38 in 2007 to 126 in 2012.

"It's growing by leaps and bounds," says Tim Clift, chief investment strategist at Envestnet. "New products are coming to us every week.

Adviser demand primes the growth. One reason is the desire to "take the handcuffs off [managers]", says Mr Sanford. "There has been an explosion of dollars to Ivy Funds and BlackRock's Global Allocation because of that," he adds surveyed, roughly 30 per cent said they changes, because advisers typically use one custom GTAA benchmark and has seen planned to increase their use of GTAA or or two GTAA strategies, Mr Clift says. global macro funds.

Advisers favour tactical investing because markets are more volatile than in the past and because investment information travels much faster today, says Joseph Montgomery of Wells Fargo Advisors in aspects is educating clients Williamsburg, Virginia. "Clients want managers who have the ability to make smart decisions on rapidly changing information," he says.

Advisers want help managing downside risk, says Vassilis Dagioglu, head of asset allocation portfolio management at Mellon Capital and portfolio manager for the Dreyfus Global Alpha Fund.

Institutional GTAA strategies are often a mix of stocks, bonds, commodities, curoverall rose from $33.9bn in March 2007 to rency hedges, futures and other investments. While some mutual funds have similar ingredients, retail products are gravitating to ETFs, because of their lower cost, transparency and tradability in less-accessible sectors, such as emerging markets debt and commodities, Mr Dagioglu says.

Some GTAA products use hedge fundstyle strategies, although it is not "a defining characteristic" of the overall group, Envestnet's Mr Clift says.

Some of these funds have faltered. herd of products will be thinned. In most

"I have seen a few that completely well.

Advisers take varying approaches to deploying go-anywhere funds, says Jeff Chapracki, senior research analyst at Milwaukee-based Capital Market Consultants "Some are making the top-down calls them selves, others want to use mutual fund and [separately managed account] mandates that allow for higher cash balances, and others are using some TAA exposures within a core-satellite context," Mr Chapracki says.

For advisers, one of the main challenges is that many go-anywhere managers are relatively new, often lacking the infrastructure and depth of traditional shops, Mr Clift says. That leads to worries about what would happen if one of these organisations prompting some advisers to predict the lost their primary GTAA portfolio manager.

Another hurdle is benchmarking. Mr Cliff Indeed, when advisers in the FT 400 were cases, that may mean few portfolio says Envestnet has developed a 20-product some hedge fund indices show promise as

A more difficult aspect of go-anywhere funds is educating clients that the diversified holdings are designed to zig when most markets zag.

Advisers need to be sure investors know products are not built to match today's frothy equities market, says Raymond James' Mr Sanford, but rather to avoid the brunt of a big downturn.

Methodology

Facts behind the FT 400

The principle behind the Financial Times 400 listed over pages 6-10 to focus on investors. Financial advisers were assessed from the perspective of current and prospective investors. The FT rewarded attributes that investors care about (or should care about) and not the value of those advisers or bodies.

The methodology is quantifiable and objective In autumn 2012, the FT solicited advisers' practice nformation from the 40 argest US broker-dealers and requested data for each group's most elite advisers. By working with organisations instead of individuals, the FT was able o obtain verified adviser data instead of relying on self-reporting, thus increasing credibility. The FT assessed those with more than 10 years of experience and $250m or more in assets under management (AUM); brokerages had no subjective input.

The formula used is based on six broad factors and calculates a numeric score for each adviser. Areas of consideration include adviser AUM, asset growth, years of experience, industry certification, Finra compliance record and online accessibility:

• AUM signals experience managing money and client trust.

AUM growth rate Growing assets is a proxy for performance and for asset retention and ability to generate business.

Years of experience indicates experience managing assets in different economic and interest rate environments Compliance record

mix of

provides evidence of past client disputes. A string of complaints can indicate problems Industry certifications (CFA, CFP, etc) show technical and industry knowledge and obtaining these designations shows a professional commitment to investment skills.

• Online accessibility illustrates commitment to providing investors with easy access and transparent contact information.

AUM and asset growth comprise roughly 80-85 per cent of each adviser's score While each adviser earned an individual score and could be ranked against another, the FT 400 is presented as an elite group, not a competitive ranking.

Aberdeen Asia Bond Fund (AEEAX)

In Asian markets, you have to do your own due diligence and discovery. Not just take someone else's word for it. That's why it's important to have people locally, on the ground, researching markets and companies first hand.

As Asia continues to transform into a reliable global provider and investor of capital, we believe the prospects for returns through credit and currency markets have never looked better. Of course, alongside opportunity there is risk. Investments solely in this region may incur more volatility and a greater risk of loss than those in more diversified portfolios.

We believe that our investment process and approach deliver results. The Aberdeen Asia Bond Fund (Inst. Class: CSABX) was awarded the 2013

Investors should consider the investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses of the Fund/Portfolio carefully before investing. For copies of our prospectus or summary prospectus, which contain this and other information, visit us online at www.alliancebernstein.com or contact your AllianceBernstein Investments representative. Please read the prospectus and/or summary prospectus carefully before investing.

Past performance is no guarantee of future results. Lipper rankings are based on total returns at net asset value, without the imposition of a sales charge which would reduce total return figures. The funds are ranked within their Lipper universe, which includes funds that have generally similar investment objectives to the AllianceBernstein Fund. Rankings shown are for Class A shares only, although other share classes are available for which management fees and sales charges will differ and rankings may vary.

Source: Lipper. Investment Risks to Consider:

Market Risk: The market values of the portfolio's holdings rise and fall from day to day, so investments may lose value. Municipal Market Risk: Debt securities issued by state or local governments may be subject to special political, legal, economic and market factors that can have a significant effect on the portfolio's yield or value. Interest-Rate Risk: As interest rates rise, bond prices fall and vice versa – long-term securities tend to rise and fall more than short-term securities. The values of mortgage-related and asset-backed securities are particularly sensitive to changes in interest rate risk due to prepayment risk. Credit Risk: A bond's credit rating reflects the issuer's ability to make timely payments of interest or principal – the lower the rating, the higher the risk of default. If the issuer's financial strength deteriorates, the issuer's rating may be lowered and the bond's value may decline. Inflation Risk: Prices for goods and services tend to rise over time, which may erode the purchasing power of investments. Derivatives Risk: Investments in derivative instruments such as options, futures, forwards or swaps can be riskier than traditional investments, and may be more volatile, especially in a down market. Leverage Risk: Trying to enhance investment returns by borrowing money or using other leverage tools magnifies both gains and losses, resulting in greater volatility.

Brad Wheelock, senior vice-president at RBC Wealth Management of St Cloud, Minnesota. "Investors first need to understand: cipal in a downward market? What's the overall goal? Once that's established, we would want to construct a portfolio that encompasses a lot of scenarios."

Mr Wheelock urges caution because, in some cases, alternatives can "look wonderful in concept, and they're supported by academic opinion, but in a pragmatic sense don't work'

The asset allocation should be targeted at investors' goals, needs and appetite for risk, experts say.

Ben Marks, president and chief investment officer at Marks Group Wealth Management in Minnetonka, Minnesota, says investors should "start with a discipline, choose a percentage, make a decision based on tolerance to risk and other investment objectives" and avoid decisions based on short-term expectations

"It's a very expansive category," says comes into sharper focus, they should narrow the scope of their questions, asking how well the asset classes being considered perform during typical markets, as well as during the difficult ones, says Debra Brede, founder of DK Brede Investment Manage ment, based in Needham, Massachusetts.

Adviser teams

Laura Suter assesses the arguments for and against different structures

Clients take a long time researching their advisers, their investment style and approach to working but many overlook structural issues. Typically, these are vertical, with one adviser at the top and a support team beneath, or horizontal, where a number of advisers work in partnership, alongside support staff.

The team approach is the most popular, particularly with the most successful advisers. But while more than 80 per cent of the FT 400 advisers work in teams, this does not necessarily mean they are better. Wealthy individuals may be drawn to teams, skewing practice by committee does the figures more personal touch while teams suggest they are able to offer a much deeper level of care

It is all about different levels of service: lone not make the quickest

Those who work alone say they are more accountable, as there is no one else to shoulder the blame if a client is dissatisfied. Peter Rohr, managing director at Merrill Lynch's Private Banking and Investment Group (PBIG) in Philadelphia and a sole practitioner, says: "I never wanted to drive down the road sharing the steering wheel. If there was a mistake made, I wanted it to be on me."

He adds that not having to consult with a team means he can react more quickly to markets and clients. Another sole practitioner, Fane Opperman, managing director of investments at Opperman Financial Group of Wells Fargo Advisors in San Jose, California, agrees: "Running a not usually work that well." Those in partnership may the most informed ones by drawing on the strengths of each adviser. "Everybody has a different skill set, you can't have one person with all those skill sets," says Scott Magnesen, a managing director and financial adviser at Morgan Stanlev Wealth Management in Oak Brook, Illinois. "Lots of successful teams have people with different backgrounds, so they can hit those different areas of client needs," he says

Clients are currently more risk averse and expect an all-hours service. Coupled with the volatility of markets, the adviser's job has become harder. Mitchell Wickham, managing director of investments at Merrill Lynch PBIG in Charlotte, North Carolina, says it takes a team to service clients because "it has become a 24-hours-a-day, seven-days-a-week job".

Clients are likely to get higher service levels with adviser teams, as research shows they have fewer advisers claim to offer a decisions but say they make clients and so can spend more time on each one. The 2012 FA Insight study of advisory firms, Growth by Design, showed the average solo adviser has 78 clients compared with 57 for each adviser working in a team.

Team advisers work with clients who have more than double the assets under management and more than 60 per cent higher revenue per client than their solo counterparts, the study showed. It is not clear whether this is because of teams choosing larger clients at the outset, or effect tive money management leading to higher growth in client assets.

Clients are less likely to feel neglected as they are taken care of by other advisers during holidays or illness. This is a weakness in the sole practitioner structure, says Merrill Lynch's Mr Rohr. He felt it when his son was taken ill, leading to periods out of the office: "It really is the one time I lamented not being a partnership.

Scott Magnesen: teams work

Clients with sole practitioners are not left abandoned in such situations. Most advisers use their professional networks to set up an emergency fallback

This approach does not work when things are more permanent, such as when an adviser retires.

"My biggest fear as an adviser is the idea that my clientele would get dispersed among 20-30 different advisers and investment philosophies," says Morgan Stanley's Mr Magnesen "It would be nice to know that my clients would stay with people I picked.'

Bonds maintain a hold

Partnerships can go wrong. Matt McLaughlin, a vice-president at Merrill Lynch PBIG in Charlotte, North Carolina, worked in management for Merrill Lynch and dealt with partnerships falling apart, which "happens every day". Clients are usually covered by a "pre-nup" style of agreement that stipulates the plan of action should the adviser partnership relationship break down.

Clients should demand clarity. With both structures, clients need to know who to contact with specific questions, what to do in the case of absences and who is leading their account.

Whether working with other advisers or support team cohesion is staff, essential to clients getting a good service

"Trust is, without a doubt the most important thing,' savs Merrill Lvnch's M Wickham. "If you trust your teammate, then everything positive comes as a result.

They say some products sell themselves. Where's the challenge in that?

Fack Buehrer reports on a reluctance to get out of fixed income, in spite of rallies

The first quarter of 2013 has seen a soaring stock market push the main US indices to new all-time highs. But investors have yet to show a willingness to abandon their lower-yielding fixed income securities.

Stocks have maintained a sharp climb since January, buoyed by positive jobs numbers, a strengthening housing sector and record corporate profits. The Dow Jones Industrial Average, a bandwagon blue-chip stocks, surpassed week of March. Simultanenew high in early April.

Given that money has been flowing into bonds and out of US stocks steadily since the first quarter of 2009, many investment industry professionals have been waiting for years for this great rotation.

Still, advisers say they are starting to field calls from clients who have yet to jump on the equities wondering price-weighted average of 30 when – and if now – is the time to reallocate money to its all-time high in the first US equities. Investments of passion come with rewards and high risks

Art collecting The past decade may have witnessed triple-digit returns yet the market appears fragmented and opaque, writes Mariana Lemann

Chinese bowl bought for a meagre $3 sells for more than $2.2m. The abstract painting "Abstraktes Bild (809-4)" by Gerhard Richter, the German artist, acquired by Eric Clapton for $3.2m in 2001, fetches $34m in 2012. Those are returns that are difficult to find, to say the least, by investing in stocks or mutual funds.

"These kinds of stories are what fuel the market for fine art," says Suzanne Gyorgy, managing director and global head of art advisory and finance at Citi Private Bank.

The fine art market, as well as other collectables markets, are highly fragmented, unregulated and opaque. Yet they have rewarded investors with triple-digit returns over the past decade.

Among so-called investments of passion, fine art has appreciated by nearly 200 per cent in the past 10 years, according to the Knight Frank Luxury Investment Index. The index is based on the weighted performance of indices for nine classes of collectables, including fine art, Chinese ceramics, classic cars, coins, furniture, jewellery, stamps, watches and fine wine.

Investors are taking a closer look at these real assets beyond their aesthetic and emotional values. "What is changing perhaps is the investment angle," says Andrew Shirley, editor of Knight Frank's Wealth Report. "Previously, people liked to collect to have beautiful things and the best collection possible. But traditional investments have lost so much of their value...[that] these investments of passion are quite attractive.

Tales of appreciation of art pieces, coupled with recent creation of wealth, especially in emerging markets, have brought fresh money into fine art. "There have been many new buyers coming into the market," says Mary Hoeveler, a New York-based art adviser. "What comes with that, unfortunately, is a lot of speculation. Wall Street takes notice and people come to the market purely as investing."

The allure comes with high risks. Take formaldehyde and a skull sculpture class". encrusted with more than 8,000 diamonds. by 30 per cent since 2008.

The sheer size of the art market makes it

Economics. That does not mean it is easy to sell individual pieces. "Art is something that is much easier to buy than to sell," Ms Gyorgy says. "It is really an illiquid asset."

To address liquidity concerns, banks that serve wealthy and extremely wealthy investors, such as Citi Private Bank and US Trust, have units that structure loans against art pieces.

These loans can help investors extract liquidity from their art assets, says John Arena, a senior vice-president and credit executive at US Trust

"From a planning point of view, [clients] need to plan for the art," he says. "If they just buy the art and they hold on to it, there are tax consequences that need to be considered.

During the financial crisis, he says, these loans came in handy for investors stuck in other loans. "We were able to use the financial aspect of an art collection to offset the value of a margin loan.³

Planning is more important because the art market is characterised by "sheep-like behaviour" and susceptible to passing trends, Ms Hoeveler says.

Contemporary art in particular goes in and out of favour. "When you are dealing with contemporary artists, their career can change, their work can change," Ms Gyorgy

Still, market appreciation is not investors' primary motivation – at least, it should not be – advisers say.

"For people who are collecting contemporary art and fine art at a high level, it is a lifestyle, not just a hobby," argues Ms Hoeveler.

"You can call a collector in another part of the world, whom you've never met before, and introduce yourself. It is quite rare that you'd be turned down.'

The more serious art lovers are about assembling a collection, the more careful they need to be about their choices

Raj Sharma, a private wealth adviser at Merrill Lynch whose clients are worth $25m or more, senses that when investors Damien Hirst, the British artist whose allocate 10-20 per cent of their portfolio to works include dead animals preserved in art collections "it becomes a sub-asset
